Haryo Nugroho is the winner of the 2011 International Cable Protection Committee Writing Award for his paper “Law of the Sea Aspects of Indonesian National Legislation on Submarine Telecommunications Cable.”

Mr. Nugroho will receive a monetary prize of £1000 for the paper. The legal writing contest was established in 2010 by the Rhodes Academy of Oceans Law and Policy (Rhodes Academy) and the International Cable Protection Committee (ICPC) to encourage legal writing on submarine cables and law of the sea of a standard suitable for publication in international legal literature. The contest was open to all former and current students of the Rhodes Academy on the topic of submarine cables and international law.

The Rhodes Academy is an intensive, three-week course of study, with lectures by leading jurists, practitioners, and international law faculty from around the world. It takes place every July in Rhodes, Greece. Its primary sponsor is UVA’s Center for Oceans Law and Policy.

For more information please visit http://www.virginia.edu/colp/rhodes-academy.html