Short History of the University

Thomas Jefferson founded the University of Virginia in 1819. He envisioned an institution dedicated to educating leaders in practical affairs and public service rather than for professions in the classroom and pulpit exclusively. It was the first university in the United States to use the elective course system.

Jefferson was closely involved in every aspect of the University’s original design, from planning the curriculum and recruiting the first faculty to designing the Academical Village, which consists of a terraced green space called the Lawn and surrounding residential and academic buildings and gardens. At the north end of the Lawn stands the Rotunda, the most recognizable symbol of the University.

The University opened for classes in 1825 with 68 students and eight faculty members who offered instruction in ancient languages, modern languages, mathematics, moral philosophy, natural philosophy, chemistry, law and medicine.

In 1824 the Board of Visitors, the University’s governing body, authorized granting the Master of Arts degree. The University awarded the first Doctor of Medicine degree in 1828, with the first Bachelor of Laws degree following in 1842. In 1899 the bachelor’s degree became the standard undergraduate degree and a prerequisite for the master’s degree, bringing the University in conformity with other U.S. institutions of higher learning. The University has awarded the Doctor of Philosophy degree since 1883.

NCAA Titles 2012-13
Virginia’s first NCAA championship in men’s tennis capped another successful athletics season in 2012-13. Jarmere Jenkins and Mac Styslinger became the third men’s tennis duo in the past five years to win the NCAA Doubles Championship. The team also won the Intercollegiate Tennis Association National Team Indoor Championship for the fifth time in the past six years.

Rowing placed fifth at the 2012-13 NCAA Championships.

Baseball made its fourth NCAA Super Regional appearance in the last five years.

Bond Rating

Moody’s, Fitch and Standard & Poor’s all give the University their highest “triple-A” ratings. U.Va. is one of only a few American universities to hold a “triple-triple” rating from all three major bond-rating agencies.
Athletics

ACC Championships 2012-13
U.Va. won five ACC Championships and now has won 56 in the last 11 years. Virginia’s total is the highest number of championships won among the ACC’s 12 member institutions.

U.Va. won ACC Championships in rowing (13th in 14 years), men’s swimming and diving (sixth consecutive and 14th in 15 years), women’s swimming and diving (sixth consecutive), men’s tennis (seventh consecutive and ninth in the last 10 years) and women’s soccer.

ACC Coaches of the Year 2012-13
Kevin Sauer (rowing) and Brian O’Connor (baseball) earned ACC Coach of the Year Awards in 2012-13.

Scholar-Athletes 2012-13
Graduate students Matt Snyder (wrestling) and Sarah Cowburn (rowing), were both recognized as Capital One Academic All-Americans and were named ACC Scholar-Athletes of the Year in their respective sports. With Cowburn and Snyder’s honors, U.Va. now has 70 Academic All-America selections overall.

Virginia had 293 student-athletes named to the 2012-13 Atlantic Coast Conference Honor Roll.

Jon Fausey (wrestling), Molly Menchel (women’s soccer), Kate Norbo (women’s soccer) and Thomas Porter (men’s cross-country/track and field) received postgraduate scholarships from the ACC.
