About the speaker:

David Martin joined the law faculty in 1980, after serving two years as special assistant to the assistant secretary for human rights and humanitarian affairs at the Department of State. He has taught citizenship, constitutional law, immigration, international law, international human rights, Presidential powers, refugee law, and property.

While a student at Yale Law School, Martin served as editor-in-chief of the Yale Law Journal. After receiving his law degree, he clerked for Judge J. Skelly Wright of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and then for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr. He later practiced with Rogovin Stern & Huger in Washington, D.C., before accepting the post at the State Department.

An authority on refugee, asylum, and immigration issues, Martin has participated in the training of asylum officers for the Department of Justice and new members of Canada's Immigration and Refugee Board. As a German Marshall Fund research fellow in Geneva in 1984-85, he examined Western Europe's response to the rising numbers of asylum seekers. In 1988 he chaired the Immigration Section of the Association of American Law Schools.

He has twice served as a consultant to the Administrative Conference of the United States, preparing studies and recommendations on federal migrant worker assistance programs and on reforms to political asylum adjudication procedures. He is chair of both a German Marshall Fund project on dual nationality and a working group for the Carnegie Endowment's Citizenship Project.

In 1993 he undertook a consultancy for the Department of Justice that led to major reforms of the U.S. political asylum adjudication system. Martin was on leave from August 1995 to January 1998, serving as General Counsel of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.
